that provide military members with the skills needed to pivot to careers in heigh-tech.

Jose Rivera:
The Career Skills program means a lot to me. It helped me realize that a lot of the skills that we have in the military, actually are equivalent into the civilian world. Whether it be administration, or whether it be any kind of cyber awareness skills that we may have.

Mainak Bardhan:
The corporate give back program is a program that focuses on our military Community. From a hard skills perspective, it's getting them exposure to one of the fastest growing technology areas that we see, and that's in software development platforms and cloud computing.

Mary Lou Hall:
I would recommend the hiring our Heroes Fellowship to others in the military community because in a very short period of time, I got to meet with amazing people from 13 different companies. In the area I'm in, applied intelligence, you know, all of these companies, it's important that we collaborate together. So just building that network was just really wonderful to.

Tyler Eccleton:
The career Skills program really put me on the right path to excel in my next career. I was able to actually get a promotion within the first year at AFS, and I contribute a lot of that success to the skills that I gained during the career Skills program. I think if I had just come from the military on my own without any training and just it went through the interview process, it might have been a lot longer of a journey to get to where I am now.

Jamie Clark:

The Salesforce Cloud Scouse program was helpful to me because it gave me direction when I was studying. It also provided me with direction whenever I got stuck on a question. It was nice to have a group of people that I could lean on.

Quincy Harper:

The one thing I would want the military community to know and understand about our program, is that access and exposure equals opportunity. By gaining access to Accenture Federal Services and our programs, it creates opportunities later on in their life.
