

SUHMEI RESTARTS WITH ACCENTURE

VIDEO TRANSCRIPT

Hi, my name is Suehmei, everyone calls me Sue. I'm a management consulting manager based in Bangalore.

In 2012, I had my first child. My employer wasn't flexible, so I decided to step away from my career and focus all my energies on my private life. I wanted to be there for my second child's formative years as well.

As the boys grew up, I became less busy with them, and I decided to return to the workforce. I wanted an employer who would let me balance my personal and work life, which ruled out my old industry.

I have friends at Accenture, so I had heard a lot about the pro-women work culture. Accenture's career reboot program provided me immense support to help me scale up and deliver on expectations.

The career reboot training programs and workshops go a long way in making you stay relevant and not feel the gap when working with colleagues. The support is invaluable, and a real confidence booster.

Rejoining the job market can feel very daunting. Don't doubt yourself or be too self-critical, just try to be relevant and allow yourself time to scale up. Go for it
