

ANALYST EXPERIENCE- PEOPLE STORY: JAY

VIDEO TRANSCRIPT

My name is Jay. My pronouns are he/him. I'm a digital business analyst at Accenture. My childhood growing up, my parents were both immigrants. They migrated to Australia in the late nineties. My dad worked many jobs and eventually he opened up his own computer store. I still remember playing around with the computer parts and watching my dad build computers from scratch, and that's where I fell into technology. At university, I studied a Bachelor of Commerce and Information Systems. This degree really blended both my interest in commerce and technology. The thing I love most about Accenture is the people I've been able to work with incredibly talented individuals, really great mentors, and people that I can learn from. What I'm most proud of so far at Accenture is my pro-bono project with a non-profit in the flood grant portal. It really gave me a sense of purpose doing work that was directly impacting my community and I think just being able to blend that with technology and innovation, that was really exciting to me. I think what makes me unique is my ability to take initiative and to really have dedication and passion for the things that I pursue in work and everyday life. Accenture's a great place. If you're interested in working across different industries. Most of all, I've been able to be myself and do the things that I really love and enjoy.
